The calculation is based on the net asset value per share (excluding sales charge), assuming distributions, if any, were reinvested. The performance is calculated according to the method recommended by the German BVI (Bundesverband Investment und Asset Management e.V.).

Past performance is not an indication of current or future performance.

The performance data do not take account of the commissions and costs incurred on the issue and redemption of shares.

Economic situation and capital market in the reporting period/outlook

Gloomy global investment environment

In the year under review to the end of September 2019, growth in the global economy continued, albeit at a significantly slower pace in many regions.

The US economy remained comparatively robust, benefiting from continued brisk investment activity and consistent job creation. On average, however, growth was only up slightly in most European countries. In fact, heavily export-dependent economies such as Germany even stagnated in the face of dwindling global trade. The significant slowdown in growth in East Asia, caused by increased import duties from the United States on Chinese exports, also had a negative impact on Japan. Nevertheless, Asian emerging economies continued to perform well among emerging markets overall. However, this was offset by structural crises in countries such as Turkey and Venezuela.

The central banks of the developed economies responded to the deterioration in the economic climate by easing monetary policy and refraining from raising key interest rates. The US, for example, lowered the target range for its key interest rates in two steps after an initial hike, back below the starting level to between 1.75% and 2.00%. Despite the additional inflation potential associated with the depreciation of the pound sterling, the Bank of England refrained from further interest rate hikes. The European Central Bank – like the Bank of Japan – maintained its de facto zero interest rate policy, but announced a renewed bond purchase programme to increase money supply.

Meanwhile, general inflation fell for the most part, due not only to the sharp decline in oil prices but also on account of the overall economic slowdown. While the prices of some commodities required by industry tended to fall, the gold price rose sharply in view of increasing economic and geopolitical uncertainty and the renewed fall in interest rates.

Equities: Positive share price trend overall, but regional slumps

The persistently low and in many places declining interest rates supported international investors' general demand for equities. However, stock market activity was driven by increasing uncertainty and corrections occurred in a number of regions and sectors. On balance, US equities performed well, with large-cap technology stocks once again making a major contribution. Overall, Europe also recorded solid growth. In the case of German listed stocks, however, the downward trend prevailed in view of the US trade dispute. Japanese companies were under particular downward price pressure, with sales expectations down considerably as a result of the slowdown in growth in China. Prices in emerging markets continued to rise slightly on average, although at regional level this concealed opposing trends reflecting the underlying situation in individual countries.

In view of the worsening trade conflict between the US on the one hand and Europe and China on the other, volatility – the fluctuation range of share price performance on the equity market – increased significantly at the turn of the year and in early summer. The situation eased off later, but investor sentiment remained jittery on the whole.

Interest-bearing securities: A broad upswing in share prices

The global trend towards declining interest rates was reflected across the board on international bond markets with corresponding price gains. In view of emerging recession concerns, increased geopolitical risks and the change of policy by the global benchmark, the US Federal Reserve, the prices of long-term government bonds with very high credit ratings rose sharply, not only in the United States but also in the eurozone. Equally positive, albeit less dynamic, was the price performance of high-quality covered bonds and corporate securities. Furthermore, demand for high-yield bonds and emerging market securities was lower than for traditional government bonds. Overall, however, they too generally recorded solid gains.

Outlook

Global capital markets are currently being supported mainly by expectations of monetary support from leading central banks and hopes of increased government spending. However, the effects of the US-China trade conflict have been weighing on the global economy for some time now. Should the Trump administration implement the already announced additional import duties on Chinese goods, the situation is likely to worsen. Monetary policy is expected to continue to have a stimulating effect on the equity markets, but it is likely to gradually reach its limits. In the meantime, the US Federal Reserve has cut interest rates on two occasions as a precaution against a feared recession. Further rate cuts are expected on capital markets. But this alone is no guarantee against a setback in the equity markets if economic data and corporate results prove disappointing. Collectively, the picture continues to be one of higher price fluctuations and widely differing developments in individual sectors and regions.

While the growing expectations of further monetary stimulus measures from leading international central banks are exerting downward pressure on returns, market valuations have reached ambitious levels. The US money and bond markets apparently still expect the US Federal Reserve to cut interest rates significantly. It recently took an additional step in this direction by cutting the range for its interest rates by 0.25% to between 1.75% and 2.00%. Money markets have meanwhile priced in five further interest rate adjustments by the US Federal Reserve up to the end of 2020, which has the potential to disappoint. In Europe, market players do not expect the European Central Bank (ECB) to increase its key interest rates until 2020 at the earliest. At its September meeting, it put together a comprehensive package of easing measures. In addition to a 10 basis point reduction in the deposit rate, this package includes enhanced "forward guidance" and the resumption of net purchases of securities from November 2019. In addition, the ECB has signalled that it is willing to take further action.
